

Wear Your Heart on Your Sleeve (2014)

Angharad McLaren, Research Fellow & Lecturer, Nottingham Trent University.

Mass-produced 'fast fashion' has changed our relationship with clothing – cheap and easy to acquire, we are unlikely to take time to undertake simple repairs or address issues of maintenance, often caused or exacerbated by poor construction and low quality materials (see for example Goworek et al, 2012; You Gov, 2012; Fletcher, 2008; Birtwhistle and Moore, 2007). Through complete lifecycle assessment, extending the useful life of clothes has been identified as the most significant intervention in reducing the impact of the clothing industry (Wrap, 2012). However, academic research has identified practical, social, socioeconomic, systemic and psychological barriers that prevent consumers from performing even the most basic of repairs, and as a result damaged or worn items are discarded or taken out of active use (see for example Armstrong et al, 2014; Middleton, 2014; Cooper et al, 2014; Fletcher, 2013; Goworek et al, 2012; Laitala & Boks, 2012).

As a textile designer and academic whose work is embedded in sustainable principles, my research has been exploring the barriers to mending and contemporary approaches to overcoming them. Darning is a technique for repairing damaged or worn fabrics by weaving stitched threads across the surface and creating a new layer of woven material that is embedded into the original fibres. Through a process of personal craft praxis, darned heart motifs were developed as a symbolic way of learning the technique of darning that encouraged people to love their clothes and literally wear their heart on their sleeve. Or in other words, a metaphor that offers an easily cognisable meaning to provide the foundation for emotional connection (Chapman, 2005:109). The pattern is adaptable, so it can be personalised to suit different individual styles.

These were showcased at a series of participatory workshops and events commissioned by Zero Waste Scotland / WRAP for the Love Your Clothes consumer engagement campaign, adopting the spirit of the 'Sharing Economy', that is a "collaborative form of fixing [that] encourages the replacement of shopping (as a stimulus seeking activity), with more creative and social experiences, centered on the shared act of making and mending" (Chapman, 2013). They aim to demonstrate new roles for designers as meta-designers (Twigger Holroyd, 2013) or community facilitators (Von Busch, 2011), using skills as strategic tools to both mend damaged clothes and weave new threads of life into the social fabric, benefitting the collective wellbeing of communities by bringing people together through shared experiences.

By taking time out to darn and repair we can begin to appreciate the value of slowing down, build better connections with our belongings and reflect on the changes we can make to move towards a future without waste.

<http://www.angharadmclaren.co.uk/#/weaving-darns/>

Jan 26, 2021 - Explore maddy wright's board "wear your heart on your sleeves", followed by 226 people on Pinterest. See more ideas about style, cute outfits, fashion. Stella Nova on Instagram: "Lovely @annasarlvit enjoying the sun and a icecream in our popular Pen dress #stellanova #withlovefromstella" 668 Likes, 19 Comments - Stella Nova (@stellanova_dk) on Instagram: "Lovely @annasarlvit enjoying the sun and a icecream in our popular Pen dress #stellanova" Fashion Mode. Look Fashion. We Are Motörhead. (Wearing Your) Heart on Your Sleeve. Motörhead - (Wearing Your) Heart on Your Sleeve. Listen. Download MP3. Nobody here gonna make us our bail Don't really care that my life isn't fair Hard on your head in the electric chair Out of your mind, deaf, dumb and blind Don't know how people can be so unkind Grown up too soon, grown up too soon Too many wolves looking up at the moon Way too clean, too fucking. healthy, you know what I mean Way too rich, every executive son of a bitch Way too mean, they're all to eager to feed the machine Way too smart, gonna come down and break all of our hearts Way too slick - way they schmooze, like to making me sick Time to leave, wearing your heart on Find out what to wear your heart on your sleeve means with definition and sentence examples. The man wearing this favor on his sleeve was a signal of their love for each other. An early use of the expression appeared in the work of the English playwright William Shakespeare. He used it in his play Othello, from the year 1601. "But I will wear my heart upon my sleeves for daws to peck at." In general, wearing your heart on your sleeve is not encouraged behavior. To wear your heart on your sleeve implies an overly emotional person who cannot control his or her feelings in public. Examples of Wear Your Heart on Your Sleeve. This example shows two college students using the idiom while di See more of Wear Your Heart On Your Sleeve on Facebook. Log In. or. Create New Account. See more of Wear Your Heart On Your Sleeve on Facebook. Log In. Forgot account? As I sit here at work in tears reading this article, I am reminded that ANYONE effected by heart disease or stroke and that is why we do this fundraiser. You'll never be a good card player if you wear your heart on your sleeve. Other players can tell if your cards are good or not by watching your reactions when you get them. Origin: This idiom first appeared, as far as we know, in a play called Othello, written in 1604 by the English playwright William Shakespeare. In this scene, cunning Iago decides to act as if he's "wearing his heart on his sleeve" in order to seem open, honest and faithful: For when my outward action doth demonstrate | The native act and figure of my heart | In compliment extern, 'tis not long after