

Parliaments and Councils of Mediaeval Ireland, Volume 1, ; 1947; Stationery Office, 1947; Irish Manuscripts Commission

The book continues with a description of the Irish Parliament in the middle years of Edward III's reign and concludes with an account of the parliament at Drogheda held in 1494, when the passing of Poyning's Law brought the period of medieval parliaments to a close. The appendices include an almost complete list of the meetings convened between 1264 and 1494, as well as copies of documents that, the authors say, are the only means whereby a close glimpse may be had of the personnel and deliberations of the Privy Council. eISBN: 978-1-5128-0601-4. By the end of the medieval period, Parliament was, in both structure and function, the same assembly that opposed the Stuarts in the seventeenth century. It bargained with the Crown over taxation and formulated local grievances in such a way as to invite legislative remedy, and, on occasion, most notably in 1376, it opposed the royal will.Â· Not only were the Crownâ€™s financial resources expanded by the system of parliamentary taxation, so too was its legislative force and reach extended by the Commonsâ€™ endorsement of the initiatives of a strong monarch, a fact strikingly demonstrated by the legislative break with Rome during the Reformation Parliament of 1529-36. Introduction Early medieval settlement archaeology utterly dominates the record of excavations in Ireland, including settlement enclosures, complexes, landscapes and ecclesiastical sites (O'Sullivan, McCormick, Kerr & Harney 2009).Â· There is a long tradition of archaeological excavation of early medieval settlement sites in Ireland, stretching back into the earliest origins of the discipline in antiquarian exploration, through to the research programs of the Harvard Archaeological Expedition, the various universities, and, the salvage and conservation excavations by government archaeologists, until, finally, commercial sector excavations of recent decades. By examining the wealth of under-explored evidence available, Downham challenges this popular notion and demonstrates what a culturally rich and diverse place medieval Ireland was. Starting in the fifth century, when St Patrick arrived on the Medieval Ireland is often described as a backward-looking nation in which change only came about as a result of foreign invasions.
