Atticus Grammaticus Cattypuss Claw, once the world's best cat burglar and now its greatest cat detective was on police-cattling duty with the kittens at the Littleton-on-Sea Home for Abandoned Cats. They were turning out the attic. It wasn't the most exciting police-cattling job Atticus had ever had. Atticus and the kittens had had a successful morning. They had unearthed boxes of books, various lamps, some odd pieces of cutlery, an ancient record player, a plastic loo seat (still in its packaging), several pairs of curtains and a doll's pram, all of which they could sell. They had also discovered a great quantity of wool, together with an even greater quantity of knitting needles and a large number of pattern books, all of which they couldn't.
