The author presents the male perspective in a way that is not deprecating and provides a useful lense into the masculine mind. I appreciate how the author describes the male need for tools and "things" during the hunter gather phase of human life and how that need has translated down into today's man. This book is not only helpful for the workplace but also in relationships with males in general. It gave me some great tools that I was able to immediately put to use in my sales calls and interactions with my husband. I've always thought that I communicated well with men but this really gave me some additional background on why they behave and react to women the way that do. Millennials value interesting work and a good work-life balance. They do not believe that excessive work demands are worth sacrifices in their personal lives. Millennials want flexibility in their working hours and are willing to give up pay increases and promotions for a flexible working schedule. They believe that success should be measured by productivity and not by the number of hours they are seen in an office. Millennials want to feel supported and appreciated by their company and their superiors. The most important thing in the workplace is flexibility. With internet and social media working in a specific place is ridiculous! Log in or register to post comments. Erkhemeer replied on 4 February, 2021 - 03:49 Australia. The most important thing to be happy at work is perspicuity.
