Teaching methods and approaches are being constantly developed and improved. Nowadays, teachers aim to apply a learner-centred approach. If we apply the saying above to the language learning and teaching, it becomes clear that to promote life-long learning and learner's autonomy, it is also important to teach our learners how to learn. According to Gail Ellis, Adviser Young Learners and Quality for the British Council and author of the book "Teaching Children How to Learn", we should develop metacognitive awareness of our students. Metacognitive strategies include thinking about learning, plan Focuses on teaching English as a foreign language to children aged 7-12. This title presents foundational concepts, practices and practical suggestions on how to develop lessons and activities for the energetic and curious minds of young learners in the 21st Century classroom. Children are ready to teach everything that they are offered, but quickly lose interest in the tasks during the lesson. It is important to constantly maintain this interest, using various pedagogical and methodical techniques, methods. Children come to the puppet theater, toy store, zoo. They draw, sing, dance. The methods of teaching English in primary school, practiced by the school, should be based on games, active activities, visual methods, and visual and understandable to children. The communicative method of teaching English in primary schools implies the development of children's reading, writing, listening, and listening skills. Tasks in the form of the game help to distract from books and rules and to spend time with advantage.
